"...AND WHAT COLLEGE ARE YOU GOING TO?"

We talked last semester with Ben Harwood, 17, of Longmeadow, Mass.; Mark Molina, 18, of San Antonio; Mark Tamimi, 19, of Lake Oswego, Ore.; Laurel Cadwallader, 17, of Kingsport, Tenn.; Jared Grose, 18, of Eugene, Ore.; Kate Killerman, 17, of Orono, Fla.; and Molly Schewe, 18, of Bay City, Mich.

Ben: You have to stress yourself out to get into the right school, so you can find the good job—there's a lot of pressure from your parents, your school, the colleges. Lynn Minton: What's the "right school?"

Ben: Where you like the professors and the kids and what goes on—the atmosphere. But for some people, the name is a lot more important than the education you get out of it.

Mark M.: For most of us, you want to go to a school with a big name, so when somebody asks you, "Where do you go to college?" you can be all big: "I go to such-and-such university." But maybe the little hometown college is best for you, because the teaching is, like, 13-to-one, rather than auditorium-style.

Mark T.: In my honors English class, there's a total challenge to see who's going to the better school. And you're not sure you want to say, "I'm going to the University of Oregon," just a regular state-run school. I actually am going there, and I'm comfortable with it, completely.

Laurel: Choosing classes, it's: "Should I take something I really want to take and that I think would be good for me? Or take an AP science class which I'm not interested in but would look good on college applications?" Friends are the biggest pressure. My friends talk about it a lot.

Jared: I took Spanish in middle school for two years, and now I think, "Gee, I would really rather have taken an art class or an extra PE class. I was only 11 years old. I should have relaxed."

But all my friends and the teachers, my parents, were saying, "You have to start getting ready." My friends have been flying all over the country to look at colleges. Spring break, visiting six colleges. I can't take it. It's crazy. They say, "Well, where do you want to go?" And one of them says "Harvard," and one of them says "Duke." They ask me, and I don't have Princeton or Harvard or Duke on my list. I think I'm intelligent enough, but I want college to be fun. Still, I don't want to say, "I want to go to Santa Barbara and surf" or, "I want to go to Colorado and ski and go hiking and biking." I don't know what I want to be. And I don't think I should be pressured about it right now.

Kate: It's gotten so bad with my friends that some of them lie about their SAT scores.

Laurel: Some of my friends are pushed by their parents or by themselves so much that they are in the top of the class—but socially their life has to be miserable. They stay up till 2 o'clock in the morning, worrying about a test.

Molly: I've been sitting up at night, agonizing: "If I go to this school, will the whole course of my life be affected? If I make the wrong choice, maybe I won't ever be able to have the life I want." But I have a 34-year-old friend who says that after a couple of years it even out—if you're good in your field, nobody asks you where you got your diploma. Anyway, I think it's more important to be happy and be fulfilled in personal relationships than to have the "top job."

Ben: It's how hard you work—you could go to Harvard and do nothing, and you're not going to get a job. But if you go to some no-name school somewhere and you work your butt off, that's a totally different story.

Laurel: Right now, the emphasis is more on competition than on actually learning, and that needs to be changed. Maybe if schools put less emphasis on competition and more on being fulfilled, that would make a difference.

LM: Will a company hire somebody because he or she felt fulfilled in high school?

Kate: Maybe if you're a happy person because your life has been good, then, when you go for a job—even if your qualifications aren't as good as someone else's—maybe they'll like your personality, and they'll know you want it bad enough and you'll work hard. And that could maybe get you the job.
